Panel Discussion:

Taboos / New Freedoms: Indonesian Literature in the Digital Era

Horizontal censorship puts real constraints on authors. When publishers are averse to publishing books on controversial issues and book stores fear that they will become the target of violent reactions, what do authors do? Have things changed in the digital era? Is it now easier for authors to speak of topical issues? Meet three Indonesian authors whose work deals with taboo subjects—Feby Indirani on religious intolerance, Rio Johan on LGBTQ issues, and Soe Tjen Marching on state violence in 1965—see how they have dealt with this problem.
